

School of Business Administration

Give your career a competitive edge

For more than half a century, the School of Business Administration at Wayne State University has awarded Master of Business Administration (MBA) degrees to working professionals who seek a broader knowledge base, enhanced opportunities for advancement, increased earning potential and a new level of professional confidence.

The graduate degree of distinction for business

According to the Graduate Management Admissions Council that oversees the test for aspiring graduate students in business, salaries and signing bonuses of entry-level MBA graduates took a double-digit jump in 2005 to a record average $106,000. The trend is global, according to a survey conducted by QS World MBA Tour. The average salary and bonus for new MBAs was up 10% in 2005 to $114,000, breaking the record set in 2001.

Accelerate the program with onsite, online, evening and weekend courses

The School of Business Administration's MBA students are typically working professionals. Our highly flexible, award-winning online MBA program was designed to meet your need for high quality and convenience. Courses offered online have "twin" onsite sections — making it possible for students to complete their MBA online, onsite or via a combination of online and onsite courses. That means you can attend classes in person or online at times and places that fit your schedule — at home in the evenings, at work during lunch, or while you're on summer break. No commuting. No lines. No wasted effort.

In addition to online programs, students can enroll in the School's Saturday or evening programs, delivered at Wayne State University's Oakland Center in Farmington Hills.

Customized degree and non-degree programs

The School of Business Administration, through its Professional Development Division, provides proven, practical solutions to business challenges through executive education, business training and consulting. We are committed to providing fully customized, fully integrated programs to address specific organizational needs and improve individual and organizational capabilities and performance. We will closely work with an organization to design and deliver a customized, company-specific MBA degree program that will develop the management and leadership skills of its employees and consequently improve the performance and effectiveness of the organization.
